Mr. Rusyan, called on the APPEAL last The Last of the Bodmann, Kyle and The New Orleans Picayune, of Sunday, gives the following concerning these ill-'ated steamers: "The wreck of the steamboat Charles Bodmanu lies in front of M'Gehee's plantation, which is on the right bank of the Mississippi six miles below the city. One of the representatives of the Picayune called upon Captain Francis, the wrecker, and from the information received from him we would presume that there are no bodies in the hold of the boat; that there is a large quantity of freight stowed away there, consisting of whisky, corn, hay, and about three tons of bar iron. Captain Francis says that the boilers and machinery are only slightly damaged, and that it all can be save i. One of the engines is supposed to bave fallen overboard as the woodwork which kept it stationary was entirely burned to cinders, and no PAPER HANGING. signs of it can be seen. It will be several days yet before the machinery can be taken out of the wreck. The remains of the Exporter are sunk about half a mile above the Bodmann, on the same side. Captain Francis states that several days yet before the machinery in good, steady demand, we have no changes of moment; the feeling is generally one of confidence as for the present from the early quotations of the morning. The features were Lake slowly one of confidence as for the present from the pacific, Western Union and Pacific Western Union and Pacific Mail. Michigan Central to-shoals. Weather clear and cool.
